

Where's Mitch?

MAD-MITCH LIBS WORKSHEET

ADJECTIVE MITCH MCCONNELL RETURNS HOME TO VERB HIS CONSTITUENTS, OR HOW CAN THE ADJECTIVE NOUN LIVE WITH HIMSELF?

U.S. Sen. Mitch McConnell put his _____ into his desk drawer, closed his _____-size safe and replaced the photograph of _____ on his desk with one of Elaine Chao, his _____. The last thing he would do is plug back in his desk phone, which he had unplugged so his _____ constituents couldn't _____ him, especially those _____ from Louisville. Congress had adjourned after doing plenty of _____. It was time to go home to _____ to take a _____ lap around the state, with (ticket-only) town hall forums filled with _____ residents. Flush with the _____ that Donald Trump's election had afforded him, McConnell began to think of the administration's _____ so far. An anti-immigration order to make America _____ again. Rolled back _____ protections from _____ strip-mining that those _____ said were _____ streams. Trump, a _____ whom McConnell likes to think of as a _____, was returning America to that _____ vision of Republicanism. McConnell felt he should celebrate. From another drawer, he took out a box of _____ and a _____ and began to think about _____, _____ and _____ and that time when he _____ with _____. Two hours later, feeling _____, McConnell _____ with a box of _____ and boarded a flight, first-class, of course. Sitting next to him was a woman with large _____ and a scowl. He could appreciate the scowl, but _____ made him nervous. "Why are you such a _____?" the woman asked. "Don't you have enough _____ from _____? Can't you do right for once?" Mitch's face, as usual, did not move from its wide-eyed, locked-in-stone grimace, other than to _____ his lips into a Grinchian smile. "Thank you for your comments," he replied. The flight seemed to take forever for Mitch, as the woman listed the ways she claimed he has _____ Kentucky. Like _____ with the _____, _____ and _____ people's _____. He got off the plane, passed through the gate and shook his _____ twice for good luck, but before he could look up, he noticed hundreds of _____ around him, yelling _____, _____ and _____, among other things. A reporter asked, "Senator, when will you order an investigation into _____ Trump? And what do you say to these protesters?" McConnell said, "_____ make policy, and _____ go _____."

Submit your best Mad-Mitch to leo@leoweekly.com to win two tickets to "One Woman Sex and The City," presented March 29 by LEO A Little Off Center at the Bomhard Theater.